Golf in the Heart of England

Located in the heart of England and accessible from the whole country, Staffordshire is a fascinating county of outstanding natural beauty. The main attraction of the landlocked county is the award-winning Alton Towers theme park but there are also plenty of accommodation deals and reasonably priced green fees to take advantage of in the local area.

Ideal places to base one's golfing party would be Stafford or Stoke-on-Trent, the two biggest towns in the county. From here, the county's luxurious fairways can be easily reached and the Staffordshire golfing challenge well and truly accepted.

Staffordshire encompasses parts of the National Forest and Peak District National Park whilst combining the wild moorlands and uplands in the north with the low undulating landscape in the south around Cannock Chase, an area of natural outstanding beauty.

Situated just outside the village of Barlaston in Staffordshire, Barlaston Golf Club features a beautiful parkland golf course. Bordered in part by the River Trent, the course demands good course management due to its challenging layout.

The course was designed by Peter Allis and built around 1972/3 and became a members club in 1987 progressing to the facility that members and visitors enjoy today.

The excellent clubhouse at Barlaston boasts a comfortable lounge bar and spacious dining room offering views across the course and practice putting green. There is also a patio for al fresco dining in the summer months overlooking the eighteenth green and fairway.

The clubhouse can provide a quality selection of drinks, snacks and meals with a regular specials board. Bennett Catering provide an excellent service for visiting societies and can offer dining packages tailored to individual needs – they invite group organiser to give them a call to discuss requirements on 01782 372867.

Societies find Barlaston's attention to detail, flexibility and value for money ideal when organising their golfing calendar. Societies consisting of eight or more players are welcome seven days a week through a range of extensive packages combining championship golf and excellent dining options.
