Home to England's most southerly-tip, Land's End, Cornwall has a reputation for fine food and delicacies such as the world famous Cornish pasty. The region also has a reputation as a fantastic destination for golf breaks with the coastal towns and cities of Falmouth, St Ives, Newquay and St Austell all featuring breath-taking scenery and a littering of beautifully maintained, must-play golf courses.

The multitude of Cornish golf courses mean there is something for everyone – from the experienced golfer to the novice understudy. The stunning sea views, pockets of woodland and the surrounding undulating countryside greenery make a trip to Cornwall a most memorable golfing experience.

With something to whet all golfing appetites, the region features all styles of golf course from links courses played over cliff-tops to inland heathland and parkland courses. With sensational panoramic views and tricky holes to contend with, any stray shots in Cornwall can still be enjoyed!

The first golf club across the Cornish border, Launceston Golf Club is close to both the north and south coasts of the county. The Club offers value for money packages for visitors and groups of all sizes coupled with excellent catering facilities and friendly staff.

The elevated course at Launceston offers spectacular views over Dartmoor and Bodmin Moor as well as majestic views of the historic town and castle of Launceston. Designed by Hamilton Stutt, the course presents an excellent and challenging round of golf for all abilities.

The clubhouse at Launceston is set in a converted farm building which has been modernised to offer a beautifully-appointed restaurant, spacious changing facilities and fully-stocked professional shop. The clubhouse's large, comfortable bar area overlooks the course with good views of players putting out on the 18th green.

Launceston Golf Club also has a very good relationship with other golf courses in the area and can offer special deals with three other Cornish golf clubs, meaning that your whole golf break can be managed in one place.

Launceston's resident professional will assist in the smooth-running of your golf break or society event from start to finish, leaving you free to enjoy the course and its fantastic surroundings.
